The majestic Himalayas, often referred to as the 'Abode of Snow', constitute one of the most magnificent natural wonders of the world. Stretching across five countries—India, Nepal, Bhutan, China, and Pakistan—this mountain range is not just a geographical feature but a vital lifeline for millions. Formed millions of years ago due to the collision of tectonic plates, the Himalayas host the world's highest peaks, including Mount Everest. Beyond their physical grandeur, they serve as a climatic barrier, protecting the Indian subcontinent from the cold Central Asian winds and ensuring the arrival of the monsoon rains. The dense forests on the foothills are home to diverse flora and fauna, including the elusive snow leopard and the Himalayan monal. However, in 2026, the region faces unprecedented challenges due to climate change. Glaciers are retreating at an alarming rate, threatening the water security of rivers like the Ganges and the Brahmaputra. Sustainable tourism and stringent environmental policies are now the need of the hour to preserve this fragile ecosystem for future generations.

Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world. In the digital era of 2026, the definition of literacy has evolved beyond just reading and writing; it now encompasses digital literacy and critical thinking. Modern education systems are shifting from rote memorization to skill-based learning. This transition is crucial because the job market now demands adaptability and emotional intelligence over stagnant knowledge. However, the core purpose of education remains the same: the holistic development of an individual. It should instill values of empathy, integrity, and social responsibility. A truly educated person is not one who holds a prestigious degree, but one who uses their knowledge to uplift society and solve global crises like poverty and inequality. Teachers today act more as facilitators than mere lecturers, guiding students through a vast ocean of information available on the internet. As we move forward, bridging the rural-urban educational divide remains a significant goal for developing nations to ensure that every child has the opportunity to dream and achieve.

- (i) How has the definition of literacy changed in 2026?
- (ii) Why is the shift toward skill-based learning considered crucial?
- (iii) What does the job market demand in the current era?
- (iv) What is the core purpose of education mentioned in the text?
- (v) Who is a 'truly educated' person according to the author?
- (vi) What is the evolving role of teachers in the modern classroom?
- (vii) Find a word from the passage which is a synonym of 'Inculcate':
- (viii) Find a word from the passage which is an antonym of 'Dynamic':
